FEBRUARY 2009

NO CHILLER VINES PLEASE!

The ripple effect of the large 2008 vintage extended into every arm of our industry, with many wineries cancelling vine orders for new plantings.

One of the obvious consequences was that many nurseries had significant stocks of unsold vines left over at the end of last planting season.

There's two ways a nursery can carry over these vines:

1. They can be held in coolstore for up to 12 months.
2. They can be planted out in the nursery fields to grow another season.

You don't have to be a rocket scientist to work out that a replanted vine will be stronger and able to grow in sync with the season, naturally.

In Spring of 2008 we made a conscious decision to remain fully committed to our long term plan. We grafted a full range of varieties, clones and rootstocks. So you will have choices and can stick to your plan. We took the unprecedented step of returning every single unsold vine back into our nursery fields. That means we can guarantee that all of our vines for 2009 planting will be fresh out of the ground.

For those of you who will be underplanting established vineyards this season, do ask for two year old vines. These are the best vines to plant in an established competitive vineyard situation.
